Just watched this short movie. It is made by a small team to help showcase possibilities in VR film. Flying by V through the few scenes allows you to look around and see the objects that you are passing - something you can't do in a standard video.

While short and simple, it does give you some feeling of the distance between objects in space. It is just an experience, without dialog or story - just a quick jaunt between points in the great beyond. The soundtrack is good - relaxing instrumental.

This shows some potential of what is possible for people to create and share in the VR world.. I don't like not recommending something, but I feel like someone has to say it: this was not a bad video, it was just very underwhelming for me.

I expected so much more... but when they say 'relaxing' I feel like they just meant 'boring'. I expected something more like 'Space Dream VR', but this was (for me... maybe I was looking in the wrong direction or something...) just empty space with a bit of very slow music... and when I felt it was about to get interesting, it did for like -literally- three seconds, just raising my expectations to lead into a big let down.

It's not that the video was not well made or anything; maybe a lot of people will like it and enjoy it (and for the price it's honestly not a problem to give it a try anyway without feeling cheated or whatever); but if you're like me and you need more action or faster music in your experiences, I'm pretty sure this will only trap you in a place in which you'll just ask yourself 'when will this end so I can play something else?' for almost nine minutes.

If you're a gamer and enjoy fast and dynamic experiences, I'd say this is not for you.. Not worth the money
